Useful information: poles and orienteering equipment are strongly recommended for the summit part of the route without clear indications. Following the ridge as quickly as possible seems the best solution.

Route:

Join the village of Ergisch by the cantonal road above Turtman. Reach the Obermatten plateau and continue to the start and finish point (2'622'804/1'126'061/1641 m). Park along the road. Start the climb in the forest which quickly brings the body up to par up to the Säntum Oberstafel point. Continue in a northerly direction to reach the Ärgischoru then the Ärgischalphoru by the ridge. The climb is through scree which requires a certain alpine habit. Head onto the summit ridge to reach the Signalhoru at 2910 m. The progression is slow, the terrain difficult but the view exceptional.

The descent follows the ridge again for about 900 m and runs towards the north-east from point 2850. Choose the ridge carefully, which allows you to avoid the scree slopes up to point 2358 at the place called Erez. Reach the first white-red-white markings from an altitude of 2,200 m and join the return path a little above Obri Eischollalp. In the clearing of Ze Tschongu, go through Verbrannte Wald and reach the Tschorr mountain pasture at an altitude of 1776 m. The road then leads to the starting point.
